WHEREAS, such projects may include providing working capital and other capital needs for community economic development activities and may be financed with tax-exempt bonds or taxable bonds issued pursuant to the EDFL and may be financed directly through application of bond proceeds or other funds to pay project costs or indirectly through stock purchases or such other means as the authority may approve including, subject to appropriate federal and state approvals, receipt of City and other governmental deposits; and

WHEREAS, a public financing entity can help to achieve multiple policy objectives that include facilitating municipal infrastructure development for the City, supporting a local financial ecosystem that improves equitable access to credit from community banks for currently underserved communities, and enhancing the capacities of financial institutions in Philadelphia through such measures as investing in community development financial institutions; and

WHEREAS, Philadelphia experiences a persistent small-business lending gap that inhibits the ability of local entrepreneurs and their business ventures from realizing their full potential – in particular within Black and Latinx communities that have historically been denied fair and equal access to credit, thereby having been prevented from building intergenerational capital resources – and a public financing authority can address such inequities; and

WHEREAS, the City intends for a project or affiliate of the authority to become a public bank; and

WHEREAS, it is intended that the authority will aid in the establishment of such a public bank, which may offer financing to and hold funds deposited by the City of Philadelphia and other government entities as well as their related agencies, including but not limited to the School District of Philadelphia, and to invest deposited funds for the benefit of the City and such agencies; and
